ARE BUREAUCRACIES IMPORTANT? (OR ALLISON WONDERLAND)

by Stephen D. Krasner

Who and what shapes foreign policy? In national leaders but rather bureaucratic pro. tions and publications. cedures and bureaucratic politics. Starting been developed and used by a number of scholars—Roger Hilsman, Morton Halperin. Arthur Schlesinger, Richard Barnet; and Graham Allison—some of whom held sub-Cabinet positions during the 1960's. It was the subject of a special conference at the RAND Corporation, a main theme of a course at the Woodrow Wilson School at Princeton and the subject of a faculty seminar at Harvard. It is the intellectual paradigm which guides the new public policy program in the John F. Kennedy School of Government at Harvard. Analyses of bureaucratic politics have been used to explain alliance behaviour during the 1956 Suez crisis and the Skybolt incident, Truman's relations with MacArthur, American policy in Vietham, and now most thoroughly the Cuban missile crisis in Graham Allison's Essence of Decision: Explain, of each option are projected. A choice is made ing the Cuban Missile Crisis, published in 1972 001/03/04 mize A. R.D.P. 90-01 1501 15000 3000 1000 4-7 article on this subject. With the publication of his book this approach to foreign policy now receives its definitive statement. The bureaucratic interpretation of foreign policy has become the conventional wisdom.

My argument here is that this vision is misleading, dangerous, and compelling: misleading because it obscures the power of the President; dangerous because it undermines the assumptions of democratic politics by relieving high officials of responsibility; and recent years, analyses have increasingly em- compelling because it offers leaders an phasized not rational calculations of the excuse for their failures and scholars an national interest or the political goals of opportunity for innumerable reinterpreta-

The contention that the Chief Executive with Richard Neustadt's Presidential Power, a is trammelled by the permanent government judicious study of leadership published in has disturbing implications for any effort to 1960, this approach has come to portray the impute responsibility to public officials. A American President as trapped by a perma democratic political philosophy assumes that nent government more enemy than ally, responsibility for the acts of governments can Bureaucratic theorists imply that it is exceed- be attributed to elected officials. The charges ingly difficult if not impossible for political of these men are embodied in legal statutes. leaders to control the organizational web The electorate punishes an erring official by which surrounds them. Important decisions rejecting him at the polls. Punishment is result from numerous smaller actions taken senseless unless high officials are responsible by individuals at different levels in the for the acts of government. Elections have bureaucracy who have partially incompatible some impact only if government, that most national, bureaucratic, political, and personal complex of modern organizations, can be objectives. They are not necessarily a reflect controlled. If the bureauctatic machine tion of the aims and values of high officials. escapes manipulation and direction even by Presidential Power was well received by John the highest officials, then punishment is Kennedy, who read it with interest, recom. illogical. Elections are a farce not because the mended it to his associates, and commis people suffer from false consciousness, but sioned Neustadt to do a private study of the because public officials are impotent, en-1962 Skybolt incident. The approach has meshed in a bureaucracy so large that the been developed and used by a number of actions of government are not responsive to their will. What sense to vote a man out of office when his successor, regardless of his values, will be trapped in the same web of only incrementally mutable standard operating procedures?

The Rational Actor Model

Conventional analyses that focus on the values and objectives of foreign policy, what Allison calls the Rational Actor Model, are perfectly coincident with the ethical assumptions of democratic politics. The state is viewed as a rational unified actor. The behaviour of states is the outcome of a rational decision-making process. This process has three steps. The options for a given situation are spelled out. The consequences

(Little Brown & Company). Allison's volume makers. The analyst knows what the state is the elaboration of an arelian and influencial did. His objective is to explain why by

STATINTL

NEW YORK TIMES 1 9 APR 1972

Approved For Release 2001/03/04: CIA-RDP80-0160 Intelligent Use of Intelligence

By ADAM YARMOLINSKY

tractive postures for a Government official in public debate is "If you only MRBM or an IRBM. But the agency knew what I know. . . ." It has always seemed to me that Government performance should be able to stand the scrutiny of public examination and judgment based on no more than a careful reading of the daily newspapers, and that it is no proper defense to take refuge in what you cannot tell your critics.

Nevertheless, there are several kinds of materials produced by the Central Intelligence Agency that can be extremely useful, particularly in making or evaluating—detailed decisions on the development of weapons, the deployment of forces, and the provision of military assistance.

To take these materials in descending order of importance, the most valuable first, I would begin with order-ofbattle information, which can be and is quite precise and informative, particularly when it covers a period of several years. Without getting into highly classified matters, it is safe to say that advanced technology has considerably increased the accuracy and completeness of this data over the last decade.

Next in importance I would put the detailed accounts of the political and economic situations in particular countries or regions. These accounts provide a degree of contemporary detail | tempt to tamper with the impartiality that is simply not available in the open

The third, and perhaps least important kind of information is the flow of news bulletins that are, many of them, the grist of the daily press and the broadcast media. This material is, or was when I last knew it, published in daily compilations, edited at several degrees of security classification.

. There are a number of problems that arise in trying to make effective use of intelligence materials - including some dangerous temptations. To begin with there is the problem created by the sheer volume of available material. The signals are there, but they cannot be heard above the background noise, or distinguished from it.

The problem of volume, or noise, is further complicated by the difficulties of proving a negative. During the period after the Cuba missile crisis of I 1962 there were (understandably) a number of reports of suspicious cylindrical objects observed in Cuba. Each of these was painstakingly checked out by the agency until the analysts were satisfied that the report was in WASHINGTON-One of the least at- error, or that what had been seen was a SAM air defense missile, not an could not prove there were no offensive missiles in Cuba. And the general availability of these reports to the Congress might tempt some individuals to issue inflammatory statements.

It is not only immediately current intelligence that can be misused by irresponsible recipients. If this legislation is enacted, a special responsibility will attach to the recipient committees to police the dissemination of the materials received.

Carcful control is essential for two reasons: in order to avoid the foreign policy consequences of public disclosure, and in order to protect sources. The issue of protection of sources is one on which I have no special expertise to offer the committee, except to point out that there are matters on which one nation is willing to have another nation gather information about itself, by covert or clandestine means, so long as there need be no official recognition that the veil of official secrecy has been picrced. The point is one that in its nature makes examples inappropriate.

The greatest danger is that Congressional overexposure of intelligence materials might lead the executive to curtail the flow of information to itself as well as to the Congress, or to atof intelligence reporting. That would be a major tragedy. I do not suggest the possibility as an argument against the proposed legislation, but rather as pointing to even greater need for an effective system of self policy.

Adam Yarmolinsky is professor of law at Harvard. These remarks were made before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee.

Chile blast at U.S. 'not news

By VIRGINIA PREWETT

As expected, Chile blasted the U.S. at the current Organization of American States assembly. It took the news play, to the virgual exclusion of everything else said, the it was no more than a repetition of charges of U.S. intervention and general mistreatment previously made by Chile and thus was, strictly speaking, now news.

The impression left with the U.S. reading public, and on Capitol Hill, was: "There they go again, those Latin Americans, whacking the U.S. even the we've poured out billions of tax-payers' money to help them."

Our neighbors know that U.S. economic cooperation in recent years has been mostly loans tied to the purchase of U.S. goods. But this never comes thru to our public.

Many things were said as the OAS Assembly opened that are of substantive interest and concern to our public. Tho you would never guess it from the coverage, other countries got lambasted there as well as our own.

LATINIL

Guatemala raked Great Britain over the coals in their current dispute over British Honduras (Belize), in which Britain sent naval units into the Carlbbean.

And Fidel Castro, whose cause was pushed by Peru, was both directly and indirectly lambasted by a number of nations' representatives.

HITS AT CASTRO

Venezuela's statement very clearly hit at Castro, without naming him, in condeming the kind of "interventionism" he practices. Costa Rica condemned "the acts of intervention aimed at creating violence and terrorism as the path to power thru the destruction of polltical liberties" — a clear shot at Fidel. Paraguay named Cuba as "the only vassal state in the hemisphere — the vassal of Russia." Colombia charged Cuba with "permenent intervention" in aiding subversive groups thruout the hemisphere. Argentine, in an incirect reference, deplored the "use of violence, whether from the left or the right, to get political power."

Quite apart from Chile's plaints, our country was criticized for failing to live up to promises of e c o n o m i c cooperation. Trinidad-Tobago brought up the imposition of the 10 per cent tariff surcharge, which the rescinded, still rankles.

And Mexico gave what was clearly an important warning in saying that the issue of U.S.-Latin American economic cooperation is the issue of peace in the continent.

APPROVED BY MANY

Colombia suggested that Latin American countries restrict expenditures on armaments, and this was approved by many speakers. This can be a historic step forward in the hemisphere and deserved notice. It was not judged newsworthy in face of Chile's blast.

If the news play reflected things said at the Assembly one-sidedly, the Assembly ltself poorly reflected realities in Latin America.

For example, even as it deliberated, the Tupemaros in Uruguay began what is called "virtual civil war."

The Tupemaros are Castro-type urban guerrillas whom Fidel Castro encouraged openly from Santiago, Chile, during his long visit there. Responsible U.S. newsmen have it from CIA and other top-level sources that Fidel Castro's Chilean embassy is helping the Yupemaros, as well as guerrillas in Bolivia. Yet Chile escaped all mention in the matter.

JACK ANDERSON

Kremlin to Pay for Revolutions

The Kremlin has asked Cuban dictator Fldel Castro "to try to regain control over Latin American revolutionary movements" and has promised "to pay all the costs involved."

This is the secret finding of the Central Intelligence Agency (CIA), which has put together the jigsaw pieces from its agents in Europe and South America.

In an earlier column, we reported that Castro had moved his Latin American liberation center from his embassy in Paris to his embassy in Santiago, Chile. His ambition, according to the CIA, is to stir up "revolution everywhere in Latin America."

. This clandestine operation, says the CIA, will be financed by the Soviets.

CITING INFORMATION that came indirectly from Cuban intelligence officer Enrique Benavides Santos in Paris, the CIA reports:

"Benavides said that through Cuba, the Soviets will support armed revolution or political struggle, whichever was deemed appropriate in given countries throughout Latin America.

"According to Benavides, the Soviets have told Cuba they will 'pay for everything' in helping all revolutionary groups, even Catholic radical groups.

"Benavides strongly emphasized that Cuba has not changed its line but still favors armed revolution everywhere in Latin America."

THE NEW liberation center in Santiago, says the CIA, "will receive Soviet funds via Cuba and play a large role in the new Soviet-Cuban strategy for Latin America.

"Representatives of Latin American revolutionary groups now in Chile," the CIA adds, "are currently preparing a campaign of increased revolutionary activity with the support of Cuba." At least one revolutionary group, according to another CIA report, is receiving funds directly from the Soviet Union. A source inside the Guatemalan Communist movement told the CIA that "the Soviets were giving $100,000 per year to the Guatemalan Communist Party (PGT)."

From a member of the Cuban delegation at the United Nations, meanwhile, the CIA learned that at least some Cuban leaders "are doing some rethinking on basic revolutionary tactics.

"There is some theoretical opposition to the 'Che Gucvara' theory, which favors supporting native insurrectionists and anarchists in poor countries," reports the CIA.

"Instead, support is growing for the Chilean formula, which maintains that traditional democratic procedures are the best means of socialist power in weak, backward countries.

"It is in countries like Brazil," the CIA quoted the Cuban delegate as saying, "that stronger active measures should be taken."

WHEN A self-styled consumers group in New York City tried to keep Sen. Frank Moss, D-Utah, from talking about "no-fault" insurance at their inaugural meeting, Moss angrily cancelled the speech.

The "consumers group" is made up of wives of members of the American Trial Lawyers Association. The Association is busily lobbying against "no-fault" because it will reduce lawyers' fees by an estimated $1 billion (b).

But the wives have agreed to back product safety bills which don't cut into their fur coats and their husbands' Cadillacs. So they wanted Moss to speak.

Footnote: "No-fault" is scheduled for secret hearings in a few days before the Senate Commerce Committee.

The Washington Merry.Go-Round

Kremlin Financing Latin Revolution

By Jack Anderson

The Kremlin has asked Cu-where in Latin America." ban dictator Fidel Castro "to try to regain control over Latin American revolutionary the Central Intelligence the new Soviet-Cuban strategy Agency, which has put togeth- for Latin America. er the jigsaw pieces from its "Representatives of Latin agents in Europe and South American revolutionary America.

ported that Castro had moved a campaign of increased rehis Latin American Libera volutionary activity with the tion center from his embassy support of Cuba." in Paris to his embassy in At least one revolutionary Santiago, Chile. His ambition, group, according to another according to the ClA, is to CIA report is receiving funds stir up "revolution everywhere directly from the Soviet in Latin America."

says the CIA, will be financed ment told the ClA that "the by the Soviets.

Citing information that per year to the Guatemalan came directly from Cuban Communist Party (PGT)." intelligence officer Enrique From a member of the Cu-Benavides Santos in Paris, the ban delegation at the United support armed revolution or some re-thinking on basic repolitical struggle, whichever revolutionary tactics. was deemed appropriate in "There is some theoretical given countries throughout opposition to the 'Che Gue-Latin America.

the Soviets have told Cuba tionists and anarchists in poor they will 'pay for everything' countries." in helping all revolutionary groups, even Catholic radical for the Chilean formula, ors armed revolution every-countries.

Soviet-Cuban Strategy

movements and has promised in Santiago, says the ClA, stronger a c t i v e measures "to pay all the cost involved." "will receive Soviet funds via should be taken." This is the secret finding of Cuba and play a large role in merica.

In an earlier column, we readds, "are currently preparing Latin America." Union. A source inside the This elandestine operation, Guatemalan communist move-Soviets were giving $100,000

Nations, meanwhile, the CIA "Benavides said that learned that at least some through Cuba, the Soviets will Cuban leaders "are doing theory, which favors vara' "According to Benavides, supporting native insurrec-

"Instead, support is growing roups. which maintains that tradi-"Benavides strongly emphational democratic procedures sized that Cuba has not are the best means of social-changed its line but still fav-list power in weak, backward; STATINTL

"It is in countries like Brazil," the ClA quoted the Cu-The new liberation center ban delegate as saying, "that

1 2 APR 1972

Approved For Release 2001/03/04 : CIA-RDP80-01601R0003

Chile prepares for attack

Battle brews at OAS meeting

By VIRGINIA PREWETT

BATTLE lines of a sort are already drawn for the Organization of American States Assembly, which began a tenday session here yesterday. Chile has told the United States it "cannot ignore" Washington's (alleged) scheming in 1970 to prevent the election of Dr. Salvador Allende to its presidency, as tenuously revealed in the Anderson-ITT scandal.

The U.S. delegation to the OAS Assembly is prepared to assume a "statesman-like, dignified attitude," but if attacked hard will "reply in kind."

The Nixon Administration, from the highest level, has signaled to Dr. Allende what weapons it has. But it is also clear the White House wants to avoid a knock-down-and-drag-out fight at the OAS with Chile. Our side has had good success getting complaining Latinos down to work in committees and may do this again at the Assembly, where such meetings are closed.

Our Secretary of State, William Rogers, obviously does not want to become involved. After entertaining the visiting delegation heads at a luncheon today he will leave for a visit to Canada tomorrow.

LOUD, CLEAR SIGNALS

The signals launched by the Nixon team to Chile on the Assembly eve have been loud and clear. They tell Santiago that Washington has detailed proof that President Allende is harboring a Cuban embassy now trying to upset governments in both Bolivia and Uruguay.

On Friday, April 7, the New York Times' roving columnist on foreign affairs published leaked information aimed at both Castro and Allende. It revealed that Bolivian exiles in Chile now marshaling to "communize Bolivia" are directed by a Cuban mission in Santiago. Dr. Allende is pointedly tied into the affair by the revelation that the Cuban who heads the mission is a Castro intelligence officer named Luis Fernandez Ona, "married to Allende's favorite daughter, Beatrice."

AID TO GUERRILLAS

Earlier, an even more detailed leak of CIA information to Jack Anderson on March 30 had given chapter and verse on the way the Cubans in Castro's Santiago embassy and the Allendista Chileans are working to help guerrillas trying to overturn governments in Bolivia and Uruguay.

Latin American sources had long since revealed this to me and it comes as no surprise to the well-informed. But the timing of the leaks, especially the one to columnist Sulzberger, indicates the White House holds a strong hand and wishes it to be known.

But this same White House, at the moment, is in a bind on the issue, one it will not be free of until after President Nixon visits Moscow in May, if then. The Nixon-Kissinger team wishes to keep its options wide, if possible. Depending on how Moscow is willing to deal, the team might later want to make a 180 degree turn, specifically on Castro's Cuba.

besides Chile's, will be heard at the OAS assembly, echoing those sure to be voiced at this weeks' Santiago meeting of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD). And these complaints may become deeply involved in our domestic, election-year politics. For none other than the longtime Nixon critic, the Senate Foreign Relations Committee Chairman, Sen. J. William Fulbright, is meeting with the Latinos on April 14.

STATINTL

VICTOR MARCHETTI

Mr. Marchetti was on the director's staff of the CIA when he resigned from the agency two years ago. Since then, his novel The Rope-Dancer has been published by Grosset & Dunlap; he is now working on a book-length critical analysis of the CIA.

The Central Intelligence Agency's role in U.S. foreign affairs is, like the organization itself, clouded by secrecy and confused by misconceptions, many of them deliberately promoted by the CIA with the cooperation of the news media. Thus to understand the covert mission of this agency and to estimate its value to the political leadership, one must brush myths aside and penetrate to the sources the CIA in 1967, s and circumstances from which the agency draws its authority and support. The CIA is no accidental, romantic labor and cultural c aberration; it is exactly what those who govern the country funding conduits, ne intend it to be—the clandestine mechanism whereby the tried to restrict the executive branch influences the internal affairs of other Senator Fulbright's a

In conducting such operations, particularly those that was simply told by P are inherently risky, the CIA acts at the direction and with the approval of the President or his Special Assistant for National Security Affairs. Before initiating action in the Secretary of State, th field, the agency almost invariably establishes that its operational plans accord with the aims of the administration and, when possible, the sympathies of Congressional lead-longer thought worth ers. (Sometimes the endorsement or assistance of influential individuals and institutions outside government is also sought.) CIA directors have been remarkably well aware of the dangers they court, both personally and for the agency, by not gaining specific official sanction for their covert operations. They are, accordingly, often more careful than are administrators in other areas of the bureaucracy to inform the White House of their activities and to seek Presidential blessing. To take the blame publicly for an occasional operational blunder is a small price to pay in return for the protection of the Chief Executive and the men who control the Congress.

The U-2 incident of 1960 was viewed by many as an outrageous blunder by the CIA, wrecking the Eisenhower-Khrushchev summit conference in Paris and setting U.S.-Soviet relations back several years. Within the inner circles of the administration, however, the shoot-down was shrugged off as just one of those things that happen in the chancy business of intelligence. After attempts to deny responsibility for the action had failed, the President openly defended and even praised the work of the CIA, although for obvious political reasons he avoided noting that he had authorized the disastrous flight. The U-2 program against the USSR was canceled, but work on its follow-on system, the A-11 (now the SR-71,) was speeded up. Only the launching of the reconnaissance satellites put an end to espionage against the Soviet Union by manned aircraft. The A-11 development program was completed, nevertheless, on the premise that it, as well as the U-2, might be useful elsewhere.

After the Bay of feel the sting of Prethe agency had its because it failed in overthrow Castro. C the top of the agenc committee, which tie tration, the agency: tices. Throughout th tine operations again the same time, and a agency deeply involv ing regimes in Laos

When the Nationa exposed the agency' trol over the CIA ha and get on with its be formed to look into of the CIA, Some (because they had be eontinued under improved cover. A tew of the larger operations went on under almost open CIA sponsorship, Radio Free Europe, Radio Liberty and Air America being examples. And all the while, the CIA was conducting a $500 million-a-year private war in Laos and pacification/ assassination programs in Vietnam.

The reorganization of the U.S. intelligence community late last year in no way altered the CIA's mission as the clandestine action arm of American foreign policy. Most of the few changes are intended to improve the financial management of the community, especially in the military intelligence services where growth and the technical eosts of collecting information are almost out of control. Other alterations are designed to improve the meshing of the community's product with national security planning and to provide the White House with greater control over operations policy. However, none of that implies a reduction of the CIA's role in covert foreign policy action. In fact, the extensive review conducted by the White House staff in preparation for the reorganization drew heavily on advice provided by the CIA and that given by former agency officials through such go-betweens as the influential Council on Foreign Relations. Earlier in the Nixon Administration, the Council had responded to a similar request by recommending that in the future the CIA should concentrate its covert pressure taeties on Latin American, African and Asian targets, using more foreign nationals as agents and relying more on private U.S. corporations and other institutions as covers. Nothing was said about reduc-

Approved For Release 2001/03/04 : CIA-RDP80-01601R000300010004-7

On the flip side

THE LAST OF THE GIANTS
By C. L. Sulzberger.
Weidenfeld and Nicolson. 1,067 pages. £6.
FALLEN OAKS

By André Malraux. Hamish Hamilton: 123 pages. £2.

Conversations with the great tend to produce better anecdotes a year later than weighty reporting the next day. When the great are seriously selling a line they are invariably dull and unpersuasive; when they are not selling a line they much prefer to talk about the past or people of the past, and so say things that are glad and sad by turns but are not history, and are not immediately printable if the journalist wants to be asked back again.

So Mr Sulzberger's anecdotes of everyone from de Gaulle and Churchill to forgotten diplomats and Africans is a highly readable and enjoyable flip side to his staid, responsible, ask-me-back columns in the New York Times. To M. Malraux no cliché uttered in his presence, far less one by himself, is devoid of philosophical importance. So he is a trifle high-falutin'; but since not many people got to hear de Gaulle's last table talk his recollections, too, are entertaining: a sort of flip mandarinese.

Mr Sulzberger's Churchill is almost to in a half-world: Chartwell had a Randolph Churchill and Julian Amery visibly declining owner whereas the will not mention Eden in July, 1956, Boisserie never quite seemed to, even except as "the jerk." at the end. Churchill in 1956 has three glasses of wine, two of port and two of brandy at lunch, reads his books aloud, plays with his carp and defends Stalin (who "never broke his word to me"). But although his lucidity no longer has a dynamo to keep it going, he seems more at peace with destiny than Malraux's report of de Gaulle, living with his cat, two television sets, his trees and the stars. The general is profoundly pessimistic, surviving "consciously at the end of a civilisation, watching "the funeral procession of a world." Nixon is popular "because Asia still believes peace to be possible." But that is a Pandora's box:

I don't believe the United States, in spite of its power, has a long-term policy. Its desire, and it will satisfy it one day, is to desert Europe. You will see.

That is the authentic voice of gaullism all right, and it explains the Malraux can be as superficial as the next man: spotting a plough, he is instantly reminded of the Cincinnatus indoors. But then he hits the essence 1.067 of gaullism in the next sentence:

Perhaps the clue to his character was not simply the impulse to say "No," but that he was at ease only when he said "No." So there is great contempt for the Pompidous of the world who believe things can be solved by getting people to lunch together. That, of course, would never do for journalists, Mr Sulzberger among them. Not much misses his eye or ear: Tito pouring claret into his champagne (learned from King Paul of Greece), Prince Bernhard drinking only bourbon because the Germans had robbed him of his scotch, an ill Dulles saying "the hell with it" in Paris and taking two portions of lobster bisque.

There are, naturally, many unguarded remarks. George Brown declares Gaitskell "is always away when troubles comes." Macmillan admits on the common market in 1962 that he has no alternative policy: "I have always made it a rule in my life to avoid fall-back positions. When you have a fall-back position, you always fall back." Allen Dulles of the CIA boasts: "The Russians are too smart to put bases on Cuba." Dean Acheson muses on Dulles and Selwyn Lloyd: "They're a pair of slick lawyers trying to outsmart each other." And Randolph Churchill and Julian Amery will not mention Eden in July, 1956, except as "the jerk."

STATINTL

Approved for Release 2001/03/04 CdA-RDP80-01601R000300010004-7 with de Gaulle in his prime. M.

STATINTL NORFOLK, VA. PILOT Alphotoved 1982 Re M - 127,079S - 174,257Intelligence and the

By Don Hill-

The Virginian-Pilot Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON.

THE CENTRAL INTELLIGENCE AGENCY—The CIA, dreaded, accused, and. abused on seven continents-has joined the college PR lecture circuit.

But unlike its fellow campus crawlers among government agencies and special pleaders, the CIA wants its public relations program kept hush-hush.

Secret publicity? This tricky exercise was attempted last month at Hollins College, Roanoke, Va., at a weekend conference entitled—honest—"Freedom and Thought Control in America.

A senior CIA official made a speech to more than 100 students, at least one newspaper reporter, and a girl with a tape recorder.

The handsome, gray-haired speaker -who had been identified in advance publicity only as "John Maury, federal employe"-was introduced to the open audience as a spokesman for the Central Intelligence Agency.

Maury actually is a high CIA official, in charge among other duties of the agency's congressional liaison.

His remarks, Maury told the mixedbag group confidentially, should be "kept in the family."

The girl with the tape recorder said afterwards she planned to make transcriptions for anyone who wanted them. Maury subsequently protested that news reports of his foray would require the CIA to "review its efforts" at

"trying to maintain some sort of communication with the academic community."

Queried for this report, he said last week, "Well, we wouldn't want to be accused of going around propagandizing on college campuses."

It's hard to see what else the CIA was doing. According to Dr. Henry Nash, chairman of Hollins' department of political science, Maury told him the Hollins visit was a kind of For Rejease 20011/03/04er, Cor Cocktails and more dent chairman who arranged the confersee whether the CIA can speak to stuheckling dent groups to try to sort of refurbish its image.

In his talk, Maury painted a glowing picture of CIA operations.

The agency, he said, is "the eyes and ears of the policy makers and it is our job to collect enough information so that they will not blunder into dangerous situations."

Hoffman, the Washington Post's impassioned leftist columnist, who was a fellow conference participant, twitted Haury about that.

Von Hoffman unkindly mentioned the Ber of Pigs, as "one of the agency's arlumphs."

The agency, Maury responded, only griners information; it doesn't make acliey.

The speaker had some titillating tid- man says Maury replied. bits for the audience. It is little known, he said, but the serior Russian intelligence officer on duty the day Francis Gary Powers was shot down, May 1/ 1960, was working with American intelligence. The officer was later caught and executed.

time to note that some circles don't consider the 1960 U2 incident an American intelligence triumph either.

The CIA, however, Maury said was able with accuracy to determine the extent of the Russian long-range missile threat and this information helped President Kennedy triumph in the Cuban missile crisis.

heckling.

There was some heekling from Maury's audience, according to people who ures." were there. A woman told Maury she'd lived in Athens a year and was appalled at the CIA's role in supporting the military "colonels coup" in that country.

Maury shot back that he'd been in Greece for six years and had been Athens agent at the time of the coup. Some of her statements were inaccurate, he tivities. CIA agents often describe themtold the woman.

After the speech session, Maury, Von Hoffman and others retired to the

Despite the criticism to which it subjected, Maury said in his speech, th CIA's activities are directed and scrut nized by a number of federal organiza tions and the Congress.

How about the CIA's subsidizing o ttions."

the National Student Association, an in Later over cocktails, Nicholas Von ternational scandal when the story broke, Von Hoffman asked Maury ove

There was no other way to provid the money for those students to get to international conferences, Maury said.

But, Von Hoffman asked innocently hadn't congressional committees al ready decided not to appropriate fund for this purpose? Didn't the CIA thu thwart the will of Congress?

"You don't understand," Von Hoff

It's not really a secret that the CIA long has attempted to maintain contac with college campuses. That, after all is where it must recruit the bright young minds that will don the cloaks and wield the daggers of the future. That also is where the scholarly studies and over information gathering that are the basis Von Hoffman apparently didn't take for 90 per cent of intelligence are centered.

> Maury had noted in his speech that the CIA reaps some of its criticism because it's a facet of American morality "that we feel that anything done in secret must be a little naughty."

Like secret publicity maybe?

Maury also had said that intelligence workers "learn from mistakes and fail-

There may have been a lesson at Hollins. The newspaper reporter was drawn to the Maury speech because of advance publicity sent out by the college. It said that a "federal government employe" would discuss intelligence acselves to acquaintances simply as "federal employes." "That just meant CIA to me," the reporter said.

"I know," said Jane White, the stu-

Memoir of a Major, buttentl Humorless, Journalist

By BURT HOFFMAN

. Star Staff Writer

One of the curses of newspapermen today. is that too many of them too often take themselves too seriously.

And Herbert L. Matthews, in this often impersonal and generally humorless memoir of his 45 years with the New York Times, takes himself more rejously than most.

Yet it is hard for one newspaperman to fault another who rays or his work: "To be where history is made; to survive danger; to get off a whaching good, first-hand story for one's newspaper and get it off in time - this is what makes journalism a great and attractive profession."

Matthews, whose chlef clalm to fame now rests with the interviews he had with Fidel Castro in his mountain hideaway in 1957, was an editorial writer for the 17 years preceding his retirement in 1967. His other 28 years with The Times were spent in a variety of assignments, mostly overseas, including stints in Paris, Rome, Madrid, New Delhi and London. He covered the Abyssinian campaign of Mussolini, the Republican slde of the Spanish Civil War, the Allied battle in Italy in World War II and the amphibious landing . on the French Riviera.

BOOKS

HIS ACCOUNT OF those years, particularly the years in Spain and his visits to Cuba, is the account of a dedicated man who cares passionately about his profession, his newspaper, the events he saw and the stories he wrote. It is this passion, and his admitted bias for "truth" as he defined truth, that brought him into conflict with many others at The Times as well as with portions of the public, including some officialdom.

As a young reporter to vering the Loyalist side of the war in Spain from 1936 to 1939 he proved indefatigat and courageous - Hemingway, who was here with him much of the time, described Platthews as "brave as a badger." Matthey: was at or near the front lines of most mayor agagements and he has justifiable pride in what he wrote.

He does not, however, have pride in what The Times printed. "The truth suffered," says Matthews, because editors handling his stories would not believe his reports and mangled them or did not print them. MatTimes who was covering the forces of Franco suffered no such problems and was believed even though he wrote only what was handed to him at headquarters and rarely ventured forth to see what was going on.

A WORLD IN REVOLUTION. A Newspaperman's Memoir. By Herbert L. Matthews. Scribner's. 462 pages. $12.50.

Much of the antagonism toward his dispatches is attributed by Matthews to the Catholicism of the editors in The Times "bullpen" who were responsible for the handling of his stories. These editors, he writes, opposed the Republican government and the support it was getting from the Communists.

Similarly, Matthews expresses much bitterness at the antagonism toward him by some of his Times colleagues and the lack of understanding of Castro and Matthews' attempts to tell the true story.

His initial interviews in the Sierra Maestra created the legend of Castro. They gave the impression that Castro, who at the time had something like 18 followers, was in fact winning his revolt against Batista. The effect was to raise Castro's morale by making him an international figure and to rally supporters to his side.

While Matthews' storles exaggerated the extent of Castro's support, they did provide an accurate impression of his political aimsaims which could be accepted by anyone who believes, as Matthews does, in justice and equality. Much dispute arose in later years over whether Castro at the time he met Matthews was a Communist. Matthews' critics contend that Castro deceived him and thus Matthews deceived the world. Matthews himself and others have pretty convincingly demonstrated that Castro's communism followed his ascendancy to power.

AN INCIDENT IN October, 1962, during the Cuban missile crisis, tells much about Matthews' relationship with The Times and with Castro. Matthews was in Mexico City with a visa to Cuba and a seat reserved on what turned out to be the last plane that left for Havana after President Kennedy's quarantine speech. His plan to visit Cuba had been the subject of a conversation between Matthews and Kennedy at the White House the previous July. Kennedy had asked Matthews to report back to him after the visit.

While awaiting the flight, Matthews also discussed his trip with Thomas E. Mann, then U.S. ambassador to Mexico, and arrangements were made for him to talk to representatives of the Central Intelligence Agency, farr Van Anda, who had left the scene by the to find out what the CIA wanted to learn in time Matthews arrived. Van Anda, writes Cuba. But the day before the plane left, John Matthews, was "the first and thus far only Colors of The Mintelligence Agency (The Matthews) and the first and thus far only colors of the Matthews of The Mintelligence Agency (The Matthews) are the first and thus far only colors of the Matthews (The Matthews) are the first and thus far only colors of the Matthews (The Matthews) are the first and thus far only colors of the Matthews (The Matthews) are the first and thus far only colors of the Matthews (The Matthews) are the first and thus far only colors of the Matthews (The Matthews) are the first and thus far only colors of the Matthews (The Matthews) are the first and thus far only colors of the Matthews (The Matthews) are the first and thus far only colors of the Matthews (The Matthews) are the first and thus far only colors of the Matthews (The Matthews) are the first and thus far only colors of the Matthews (The Matthews) are the first and thus far only colors of the Matthews (The Matthews) are the first and thus far only colors of the Matthews (The Matthews) are the first and thus far only colors of the Matthews (The Matthews) are the first of the Matthews (The Matthews) are the Matthews (The Ma Oakes, editor of The Times editorial page, great managing editor that (The) Times has contacted Matthews "with orders from on had. . . . I did not work under Van Anda and high that I was not, under any circum-knew him only by reputation and office gostion of being trusted by the White House and the State Department, but not by my own newspaper." The moral of the incident, writes Matthews, "is that journalism is sometimes too important to be left to editors and publishers. I presume that there was some element of concern for my safety . . . but I suspect it was much more a case of the embarrassment that would have been felt and the criticisms from obvious quarters at the New York Times having an editor in Havana - and me, of all people - during such a crisis."

In 1963, Matthews did return to Cuba as part of a trip he was taking for background information for his editorial writing. Barred from writing anything for the news department, Matthews attempted to write for The Times Sunday magazine. But, says Mat-thews, "the pervading American emotionalism about Castro...seemed to me to affect Lester Markel, the Sunday editor, more than anyone else on The Times....Since he knew nothing about Cuba, but felt very strongly about it, a barrier was raised that I could not surmount" and an article written for the magazine was rejected.

While Matthews condemns many of the editors at The Times as antagonistic toward him-and thus toward truth-his relationship with Times publishers was more sanguine-at least until Arthur Ochs Sulzberger, the current publisher, took over.

Basic to an understanding of the case Matthews presents against his editors is the historical enmity that exists between reporters and editors on virtually all newspapers. Few reporters ever believe an editor is capable of sound judgment of any sort, and a similar attitude prevails among many editors toward reporters. A reporter is, as he should be, intimately involved in his own story and his own problems. An editor is faced with the problems of many reporters compounded by the limits of space and time. As an editor myself, who has listened to the same sort of complaints Matthews levels against his editors, I nevertheless tend to sympathize with Matthews. It is questionable, however, whetiner Matthews is fair in ascribing truth and the purest of motives to himself while criticizing the abilities and the motives of many of his colleagues.

er's. 462 pages. $12.50.

high that I was not, under any circum-sip, and one-fourth of ould not believe his reports and Matthews wrote: "I was in the peculiar posi-Much of the rest is more a series of editorial

STATINIT

Approved For Release 2001/03/04: CIA-RDP80-016 S - 203,112

MAN 2 8 1972

CIA: Spies

Or Just

Data Men?

By WILLIAM KEZZIAII

What is the real Central Intelligence Agency (CIA)?

Is it a super secret spy agency or a fact-gathering agency which daily gives the President a briefing on the world situation of the past 24 hours?

LYMAN B. KIRKPATRICK, former CIA director-comptroller, spoke of both roles Thursday at Akron University 1

However, Kirkpatrick revealed little of what goes on behind the walls of CIA head-quarters in Langley, Va.

The CIA that Kirkpatrick portrayed has had its successes and failures.

ONE SUCCESS came during Presidential briefings after the high flying U-2 plane photographed Cuban missile placements and set in motion what Kirkpatrick called the high point in the CIA.

"The Cuban missile crisis proved what the CIA could do," he said.

The failure? That was the Bay of Pigs invasion which Kirkpatrick characterized as mistaken and confused intelligence work.

KIRKPATRICK believes the most difficult aspect for any intelligence agency is analyzing and projecting the wideranging material it gets.

Getting material is easy.

"Most raw intelligence comes from sources open to the public—such as newspapers and radio broadcasts. In fact, 80 pt. of the material gathered can be seen or heard by anyone and that includes the in "closed" countries," he said.

Approved For Release 200 1503 104 cc Fig. Rp 80-01601R000300010004-7 no American spies in the James Bond mold.

New Light on the Cuban Missile Crisis of 1962

By Chalmers M. Roberts

THE CUBAN missile crisis of 1962 never ceases to intrigue those who lived through it or had anything to do with it. And so two new works that add to the general knowledge are well worth reporting. One is a unique look at the crisis by a Communist diplomat then in Washington. The other is an analytical study by an associate professor at the Kennedy School of Government at Janos Radvanyi was the Hungarian chargé in Washington at the time (there was no ambassador), an affablo fellow with whom I had much contact. On May 17, 1967, he defected, turning up later at Stanford where he wrote "Hungary and the Super Powers" to be published in May by the Hoover Institution. The book is largely about Hungarian-American relations. But one chapter on the missile crisis will have far wider interest. What follows is from it.

IN SEPTEMBER and October, 1962, Radvanyl reported home that the United States was overreacting to reports of Soviet activity in Cuba. He did so in part because Soviet diplomats here had told him the uproar was part of the American pre-election campaign. But one day he received a copy of a cable to Budapest from Hungarian Ambassador Janos Beck in Havana. Beck "made it a point to discount information he had received from the Chinese embassy in Havana as being provocatively anti-Soviet," Radvanyi writes. But "the Chinese ambassador had apparently told him that according to information he had received from private sources the Soviet Union was delivering surface-tosurface bailistic missiles to Cuba and that Soviet military advisers had come to Cuba not as instructors but as members of Soviet special rocket force units to operate these missiles."

Radvanyi goes on: "Ambassador Beck remarked that his Chinese friends had complained of Soviet unwillingness to disclose any details and had asked Bock whether he knew anything more about the whole affair. Beck argued that the story of the deployment of ground-to-ground missiles had been launched by 'American warmongers' and observed that neither the Soviet ambassador in Havana nor high-ranking Cuban officials had mentioned anything to him about the missile build-up."

This message apparently was sent in late July or early August. Soviet arms shipments were arriving at that time, though the first medium range missiles did not come until Sept. 8. On Aug. 22 ClA Director John Mc-Cone voiced to President Kennedy his suspicions that the Soviets were preparing to introduce offensive missiles, perhaps on the basis of Information gathered in Cuba that month by French intelligence agent Philippe De Vesjoli. However, on Sept. 19 the United States Intelligence Board's estimate was that the Soviets would not introduce offen 2001703004: CIA-RDR80-01601R000300010004-7ound within the next sive missiles into Cuba. Temphasized that unless a quick sive missiles into Cuba. Temphasized that unless a quick sive missiles into Cuba. Temphasized that unless a quick sive missiles into Cuba. Temphasized that unless a quick sive missiles into Cuba. another story.

Former Hungarian Diplomat Here Reveals Some Intriguing Background

of three meetings with Soviet Ambassador Soviet embassy, they discussed Anatolyl F. Dobrynin and the heads of all Lippmann's rolumn of the previous day sugdinner at the Czech embassy Dobrynin "as- article a trial balloon, launched by the U.S. uation had been discussed at length along formed."

THE CRISIS became public with the President's Oct. 22 speech. Next day Dobrynin called the diplomats together again, explaining that the purpose was "to collect information and to solicit opinions on the Cuban situation." Dobrynin "characterized it as serious and offered two reasons for his concern. First of all, he foresaw a possible American attack on Cuba that would almost surely result in the death of some Soviet military personnel who had been sent to handle the sophisticated new weapons. Thus by implication the Soviet ambassador was admitting the presence in Cuba of Soviet mediumrange missiles. Secondly, he feared that when Soviet ships reached the announced quarantine line a confrontation was mevitable." Dobrynin "explained that any defensive effective. (Czechoslovak ambassador) Ruzek weapon could be labeled offensive as well remarked grimly that if the Americans invaded, it would definitely trigger a nuclear threat from Cuba. The Pearl Harbor attack, war. At this point I lost self-control and he suggested, might have been responsible for this unwarranted paranoia. Everybody agreed that the situation was serious and Soviet one. Dobrynin attempted to assure that the possibility of an American invasion of Cuba could not be discounted." Asked how Moscow intended to deal with the quarantine, "Dobrynin was forced again to reply that he simply had no information . . .

party he had met with Attorney General the families of Soviet diplomatic personnel. party he had het with Attorney and he had he embassy. It was then that Robert Kennedy

On Oct. 18 Radvanyl attended the first nist diplomats on Oct. 26, this time at the the Communist embassies in Washington, gesting dismantling of American missiles in Dobrynin discussed the meeting the previous Turkey along with the Soviet missiles in day between President Kennedy and Soviet Cuba.: "The Soviet embassy." writes Rad-Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko. After vanyi, "apparently considered the Lippmann sured his audience that recent reports of So- administration to seek out a suitable soluviet ground-to-ground missiles in Cuba were tion. Dobrynin sought their (Commueompletely without foundation." As to the nist diplomats') opinion as to whether they Kennedy-Gromyko meeting, "nothing exthought the Lippmann article should be retraordinary had happened"; the German sit-garded as an indirect suggestion on the part garded as an indirect suggestion on the part of the White Ilouse." Only the Romanian with disarmament. At this point in his account, Radvanyi states that "it seems highly think that it was just that; Lippmann, as far unlikely to me" that Gromyko had not been as I know, has never said whether the idea "privy to the Kremlin discussions" about the was simply his own. According to RFK's acmissiles but that "it is altogether possible count, Adlai Stevenson on the 20th had sugthat Dobrynin may not have been in gested a swap involving withdrawal of American missiles from both Turkey and Italy and giving up the naval base at Guantanamo Bay in Cuba. The President rejected the proposal.

> 9 AT the meeting on the 26th Dobrynin said he still had no information on how Moscow would meet the quarantine. "I told him," writes Radvanyi, "that according to my information the American buildup for an invasion of Cuba was nearly completed and that American missile bases had aimed all their missiles toward targets on the island. Only a go-ahead signal from the President was needed. The Soviet ambassador concurred with my analysis, adding that the Soviet Union found itself in a difficult position in Cuba because its supply lines were too long and the American blockade could be very asked whether it was not the same to die from an American missile attack as from a me that the situation had not reached such proportions and that a solution would no doubt be found ...

"At the close of the meeting, any last remaining ray of hope I may have had for a On Oct. 23 at the Soviet embassy's mili- peaceful solution was abruptly shattered. tary attache party Dobrynin told Radvanyi Dobrynin now announced that the Soviet "that the situation was even more confused embassy was this very moment burning its and unstable . . ." But, as Radvanyi notes, the archives. Shocked at this news I inquired of Soviet envoy did not disclose that before the Dobrynin whether he planned to evacuate told Dobrynin the President knew he had tion I rushed off to Budapest a long sumbeen deceived by assurances from Dobrynin mary of my latest meeting with Dobrynin, and others that no offensive missiles would and informed the foreign ministry that Dobe placed in Cuba, as detailed in Robert brynin had confirmed the information that the Kennedy's posthumously published "Thir-Americans were militarily prepared to incontinué à